Therefore™ Meets GDPR Requirements

Therefore Corporation is pleased to announce that Therefore™ software has been declared compliant to the requirements of the EU General Data Protection Regulation (EU GDPR) following an audit by the Germany-based data protection consultancy firm, Ebner Stolz.

A representative of Ebner Stolz, certified Information System Auditor and German Public Accountant, Thomas Heithausen said in his summary audit statement:

“We have found that Therefore follows the concepts of ‘Privacy by Design’ and ‘Privacy by Default’ thus allowing users to meet the requirements of the GDPR in regards to data and document management.”

Therefore software solutions have been verified and certified to enable an effective management of data in accordance to GDPR regulations, which comes months ahead of the GDPR’s scheduled enforcement that is to be made fully effective as of 25th May 2018.

Therefore Corporation’s CEO, Michael Lebeda, also chimed in his response to Ebner Stolz’s audit:

“When we at Therefore first encountered the GDPR’s concept of ‘privacy by design and privacy by default’, we immediately knew that our software provided an inherently secure solution to effective information management. Privacy by design and privacy by default have always been key characteristics of Therefore and we are pleased that this has now been verified and certified by one of the most prolific consultancy firms dealing with matters related to GDPR compliance.”

Therefore Corporation is proud to be among the first information management solution companies to address the importance of organizational compliance to the GDPR as well as related matters regarding data privacy and security practices.
